

Indo-Ukrainian Humanitarian Review

Indo-Ukrainian Humanitarian Review

Vol 1 • Issue 1 • Spring 2026

KHATA = HUT IS SACRED TEMPLE

The Sacred Space of Woman as the Foundation of Networked Civilization

Interdisciplinary Essay · 2026

Developed by Liuba Korchun with the informational support of ChatGPT and Claude AI

ABSTRACT

This essay develops an interdisciplinary theory in which the traditional Ukrainian khata (hut) is conceived as a sacred space and a fully realized cosmological model – the foundation of a networked, horizontally organized civilization. Drawing on the oral tradition preserved by cultural scholar L. P. Sannikova (Lyuba Yukhnyk-Korochun), as well as data from cultural studies, archaeology, geophysics, and biology, the author argues that the Trypillian culture was not a primitive matriarchy but an advanced networked civilization with no hierarchical apex. The woman-mistress of the home was the keeper of the khata's sacred space, which served simultaneously as a protective, ritual, and cosmological center. The building materials of the khata – clay and locally sourced timber – resonated with the geomagnetic field of the Ukrainian Crystalline Shield, forging a unique bond between the female body and the geology of the land. The civilization's protective network functioned on three levels: cultural (ornament, song, ritual), biological (Rh-negative blood), and geomagnetic (the resonance of the khata with the earth). Parallels are drawn with the Basque tradition of Etxekoandrea and Marija Gimbutas's concept of the Goddess society. Muscovite civilization is analyzed as an absolute anti-system – a hierarchical structure with a fundamentally different geology and relationship to female space. Key conclusion: the Trypillian network did not disappear – it was transmitted orally, from mother to daughter, and survives in living tradition to this day.

Keywords: khata-temple; sacred space; networked civilization; Trypillia; geomagnetic resonance; Ukrainian Crystalline Shield; oral tradition; ornament; Rh-negative blood; woman-mistress; pre-Kurgan Europe.

Dedicated to the Ukrainian cultural scholar

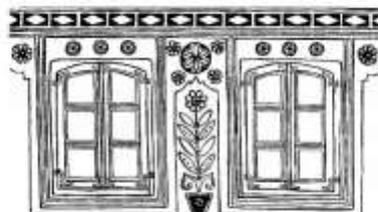

L. P. Sannikova (Lyuba Yukhnyk-Korochun)

Knowledge passed from person to person. Oral tradition.

The Sacred Space of Woman as the Foundation of Networked Civilization ◆ ◆ ◆

Хата з прикрасами, сучасні інтер'єри до хати, Львівська обл., 30-ві рр. ХХ ст. (Синявський 1998:137)

Детальніший варіант прикраси вікна до хати, Львівська обл., 30-ві рр. ХХ ст. (Синявський 1998:138)

About This Essay: Oral Tradition as Method

This essay is dedicated to Ukrainian cultural scholar L. P. Sannikova – Lyuba Yukhnyk-Korochun, who has already passed into another world. We will not provide academic references with page numbers and publisher names. Because this material reached us differently.

Private correspondence. Oral conversations. Samvydav (self-published texts) read within circles of those who understood. Knowledge in Ukraine was always transmitted this way – from person to person, bypassing official institutions that could ban, burn, or rewrite it.

A thought cannot be stolen. One cannot stamp it and demand payment. The Vedas know the names of the rishis who heard the hymns – but recognize no copyright. Vishvamitra heard wisdom and hymns from Universal Consciousness. And passed them on to people. Without claims – for he was only a transmitter.

The Ukrainian song is the same – someone specific sang it first. But that person left no signature. Because they understood: the song is greater than the singer. It came through them – not from them. Our songs are our Vedas. Full stop.

Sannikova's thoughts live in us because she convinced us, and they (her ideas) are already encoded in our memory at the cellular level. Yogananda and Vivekananda said: human memory can store information at the molecular level. What is heard from a person you trust is retained differently than what is read in an academic publication.. What is heard from a person you trust is retained differently than what is read in an academic publication.

This is the network in action. Sannikova is gone. But her thought lives on. And now, through this text – it will travel further. We need nothing from the Hindus and their Vedas. We have everything of our own, far deeper and older. The Sanskrit Vedas are a reflection, a mirror of a similar networked organization of society. Moreover, in India the network was already corrupted by certain hierarchical incursions – while ours remains pure.

Section I. Matriarchy — A Misleading Term

When hierarchical consciousness looks at a networked society — it sees “chaos,” there is no one “on top.” And since lineage is traced through the maternal line, it concludes that “the old woman is in charge.” It has no third option in its vocabulary.

This is why these terms appeared: patriarchy — father on top, matriarchy — mother on top. They simply swapped the gender at the apex of the pyramid. The pyramid remained.

“Arkhat” means elder — already a hierarchy. Matriarchy is a projection of limited hierarchical consciousness onto a networked society. Hierarchy simply cannot understand what it means to exist “without a ruler-tsar.”

But Trypillia, the Basques, Draupadi — these are not matriarchies. There is no apex at all. Neither male nor female. There is a network of nodes with different functions. Woman — mistress of space. Man — warrior and protector.

Not someone higher — but each answers for their own function and sphere. Like neurons in the brain: there is no “head neuron.” There is a distributed network, where each node performs its function.

We need a new language. Trypillia is not matriarchy. Trypillia is a network. And not the primitive “primitive communism” — this is the highest form of societal organization.

Section II. The Khata as Sacred Space

Etxekoandrea and the Mistress of the Khata — One Archetype

The Basques are a mysterious people who preserved the memory of Europe’s Paleolithic. Their language — Euskara — belongs to no known language family. It predates the Indo-European conquests.

The Basques have the concept of Etxekoandrea — “Mistress of the House.” The highest figure in the home. Not a queen, not a priestess — mistress of her own space. Women inherited property, served as judges and arbiters, yet never held any political power. Because the home was their sphere of responsibility.

The Ukrainian hostess of the khata is the same archetype. Different ends of one thread stretching from pre-Kurgan Europe.

The Khata – More Than a Dwelling

Sannikova affirmed the sacredness of the khata – and this is no metaphor. The khata is a cosmological model. Three tiers: the foundation – connection with earth and ancestors; the walls – the space of the living; the roof – connection with the sky and Universal Consciousness. For more detail – dear friends, seek out the samvydav and her works..

The pokut' – the sacred corner – faces east toward the sunrise. The stove – the center of living fire, the heart of the khata. The threshold – the boundary between one's own and the foreign, between protected space and the outer world. Every element carries meaning.

The khata is not a building. It is a materialized model of Universal Consciousness, at the center of which stands a woman. Sacred space. This is why a networked community needs no pompous temples, ziggurats, pyramids, or mausoleums with a corpse inside.

Ornament as the Language of the Khata

Doors, windows, walls – all covered in ornament. This is not decoration. This is a protective code. Diamonds, spirals, circles – the very language of the goddess that Gimbutas found on Trypillian ceramics. The khata speaks this language outward – to the world. And inward – to those who live within it.

The mistress whitewashes the khata, paints ornaments, embroiders rushnyky (ritual towels). She is not decorating – she is maintaining the protective field of the space. This is her ritual function. This is her responsibility, rooted at the molecular level.

Section III. Geomagnetic Resonance

The Crystalline Shield

Central Ukraine – the territory of Trypillian settlement – rests on the Ukrainian Crystalline Shield. It is one of the oldest geological formations on Earth. Its age exceeds three and a half billion years.

The Crystalline Shield produces a unique geomagnetic field. Different from that of the Muscovite plains' marshes or sandy steppes. This is literally a different physics of existence on this land.

The Khata as Resonator

The traditional Ukrainian khata is built by TOLOKA (communal labor) from local materials – clay, wood, straw, chaff, reeds. Not brought from afar, but taken from this very land, this geological field. These materials are alive.

Sannikova transmitted to us: the frequencies of clay resonate with the frequencies of the female womb. A woman in a clay khata standing on the Crystalline Shield is literally in resonance with the earth on which she stands. This is not mysticism – this is the physics of materials and geomagnetic fields. Which means our ancestors knew this not from books and instructions, but from Universal Consciousness, directly.

A woman in her khata is in resonance with the Earth. The khata is a resonator between the woman and the geomagnetic field of this Earth. That is why she is protected there – at the bio-molecular-geomagnetic level.

Hence the sacred feeling of “one’s own land.” This is not a metaphor for patriotism. This is a literal physical resonance of the body with the geology of a place. A woman torn from her khata and transplanted to a foreign space is physically severed from this resonance.

Section IV. Muscovy as Anti-System

The Bolshak and Snokachestvo

The bolshak – the senior male of the clan – held absolute power over everyone in the household. This was not merely patriarchy. This was the institutionalized destruction of woman’s private space.

Snokachestvo – the bolshak’s sexual right over daughters-in-law – was not a deviation from the norm. It was a documented practice that followed from the logic of the system: the daughter-in-law entered a foreign khata and lost her sovereignty. Her body was a resource of the extended family, which was the property of the bolshak.

The Ukrainian song “Do Not Lead Me into a Strange Khata” is not a romantic whim. It is a legal formula. A warning about the system that stands on the other side of the threshold.

Different Geology and Geomagnetic Fields – A Different Civilization

Muscovy was built on marshes and podzolic soils. Different geology, different geomagnetic field, different construction materials. The hut there is not a resonator with the earth, but simply a shelter from the cold.

This is not a higher or lower civilization. It is a fundamentally different physics of existence. A different resonance between people and land. Hence – a different relationship to space, to the woman within it, to the concepts of “one’s own” and “foreign.”

Muscovy and Ukraine are not simply different states or cultures. They are different systems at the molecular and geomagnetic level. Civilizations utterly alien to one another.

Section V. Three Levels of Network Protection

First Level – Cultural

Ornament, song, ritual. Memory in hands and voice. The network distributes memory across thousands of nodes – and it cannot be destroyed in any one place. The Library of Alexandria burned. The vyshyvanka (embroidered shirt) did not.

Second Level – Biological

Rh-negative blood as the network’s built-in protocol. An Rh-negative woman and an Rh-positive man – the first child may be born. But the mother’s body remembers the foreign protein and produces antibodies. Without modern medicine – a natural limitation on offspring from mixed couples.

Nature was literally telling the Rh-negative woman: your husband must be one of your own – equally Rh-negative. The Rh-positive conqueror cannot overwrite the network through the maternal line. The network is protected at the level of blood.

The Basques and Ukrainians – two peoples with the highest percentage of Rh-negative blood in Europe. Both – the deepest surviving remnants of pre-Kurgan civilization. This is no coincidence. European science has already credited the Basques with 27,000 years of uninterrupted existence. The mountains helped them – fine. But we are fed the notion that we were never here, that we were invented by the "Austrian general staff," because we have never had a "tsar," never had pyramids or mausoleums with corpses inside. Lies. We are equally eternal on this land – we did not arrive, we did not depart, we were born here, and we are immortal.

Third Level – Geomagnetic

The khata on the Crystalline Shield. Clay and locally sourced timber. Resonance between the female body and the geology of the earth. The woman in her khata – protected at a level the conqueror cannot see or comprehend.

The khata protected space. The Rh factor protected blood. Geomagnetic resonance protected the very physics of existence. Three levels – and the network survived.

The Network Is Immortality

Sannikova's thoughts live in us – not from paper, but from conversation. Song lives – not from a musical score, but from the heart. Ornament lives – not from a museum archive, but from a mother's hands.

Copyright is a tool of hierarchy. A way to fence off knowledge and charge a toll. The network transmits differently: you heard it – pass it on. No claims. No certificates.

The Vedas know the names of the rishis – but not copyright. Ukrainian songs know that someone first sang them – but that person left no signature. Because they understood: the song is greater than the singer. It came through them – not from them.

Songs are the Ukrainian Vedas. And we need nothing from the Hindus. India preserved the oral tradition in texts. Ukraine preserved it in living performance. That is even stronger.

The Trypillian network did not disappear. It was passed from mouth to mouth, from hand to hand, from mother to daughter – without certificates and without authorities. Like the Vedas. Like a song. Like the thought of Sannikova, which lives in us today. The network is immortality.

Sources

L. P. Sannikova (Lyuba Yukhnyk-Korochun). Materials on the sacredness of the Ukrainian khata, geomagnetic resonance, and the symbolism of ornament. Samvydav and private communications. Oral transmission of knowledge from person to person.

Samoilovych, V. P. Folk Architecture of Ukraine in Illustrations (1999). – Illustrations of the khata-temple.

Gimbutas, Marija. The Language of the Goddess (1989). The Civilization of the Goddess (1991).

Graeber, David; Wengrow, David. The Dawn of Everything (2021).

Yogananda, Paramahansa. Autobiography of a Yogi (1946). On molecular memory and oral tradition.

Vivekananda, Swami. Raja Yoga (1896).

Research on Rh-negative blood among the Basques: PMC/NCBI, 2018.

Author Statement and Acknowledgements

The theory was conceived and developed by the author — Lyuba Korchun — as an independent interdisciplinary study. The research synthesis and analytical framework were developed with the assistance of Claude AI (Anthropic, 2026), as a scientific assistance tool. All theoretical positions, conceptual connections, and interpretations are the original work of the author. Images were created by AI ChatGTP, [copyright not claimed].

The article is published in accordance with the principles of open access (Diamond Open Access). The author received no financial support from any institution for this research. No royalties are claimed. The author reserves the right to publish in other outlets. The knowledge and ideas were received by the author from Universal Consciousness; she considers herself only a transmitter of Eternal Information — Information never disappears anywhere.

© 2026 Люба Корчун. Published under CC BY 4.0 license.

Correspondence: open through the open-access journal.